

different types of spaces in gardens

Sardar or Biruni (the head mansion):

the mansion that is built at the entrance and the part of the house for guards and gardeners.

in state gardens this part was the place for all the state activities and in front of it there would always be a plaza or square for the ceremonial event.

Andaruni:

this was the most private part of the garden usually used for the family members and mostly consisted of a garden with Sour orange or Pomegranate.

Service areas:

this part was proportional to the grandeur of the garden and consisted of the storage area, bath house, water storage, tea house and the stable.

these places were never located on the main axis.

Hotel Karvansehay Moshir (Sardar) Yazd

Hotel Karvansehay Moshir (Sardar) Yazd

Hotel Laleh (Sardar), Yazd

Architecture Faculty (Sardar), Yazd

Architecture Faculty (Godal Bghcheh), Yazd

Architecture Faculty (Godal Bghcheh), Yazd

Hotel Laleh (Service areas), Yazd

Khaneh Lariha (Service areas), Yazd

Khaneh Lariha (Service areas), Yazd

Hotel Laleh (Andaruni), Yazd

Khaneh Lariha (Andaruni), Yazd

side and smaller spaces:

Baghche (small garden):

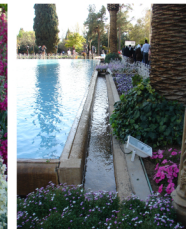

was a garden in smaller scales usually for flowers which was mostly seen in large gardens of wealthy people.

Godal Bghcheh (pit garden):

this type of garden were usually built in areas with less accessible water source. these were basically gardens that were lower than the ground level for better accessing the water and deeper for better creating the shadow. sometimes the depth of the garden would reach the depth of the Qanat.

Eram Garden (Bghcheh), Shiraz

Eram Garden (Bghcheh), Shiraz

Agha Bozorg Mosque (Godal Bghcheh), Kashan